Newly Discovered Mineral Spring.

On Frodo's Hill.

The newly discovered mineral spring known as Frodo's spring is fast coming to the notice of the people of the valley, as its water being used by many families in Norway and Frodo hills with good effect.

The water of the easterly slope of Frodo's Hill on the farm owned and occupied by David Frost, and his son, John, is the highest in the county, 3500 ft above the level of the sea, commanding one of the finest views of the mountains and rural scenery in Maine and is of good quality. Mr. Frost recently forwarded a quantity of this water to Dr. F. C. Robinson of Bowdoin College, a chemist, physicist, for analysis and sent the following reply:

Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., Jan. 19, 1890. Prof. Frost, Norway.—I have completed the analysis of the water of the spring and below is the result. The sample was very good. It is not out of our taste. It contains 2.51 grains of solid matter per U. S. gallon, and is a low level. The former is a mineral water, and the latter is a natural mineral water made up as follows:
